Wendy Wert,
 Sanitation Districts of Los Angeles County

In Southern California the South Coast Air Quality Management District (AQMD) limits the concentration and mass of hydrogen sulfide (H₂S) in gas from all sources (Rule 431.1). Many wastewater treatment plants in the region are successfully applying iron salts to mitigate H₂S concentrations in the biogas produced on-site through the anaerobic digestion of biosolids. In the Spring of 2005, the iron salt usage at nine of these facilities was evaluated to assess chemical costs, dosages, and determine the optimum injection locations for application of metal salts to accommodate digester gas H₂S regulations. Ms. Wendy Wert will present the findings of this evaluation, which were presented at the WEF Residuals and Biosolids Management Conference 2006 "Bridging to the Future" in March.
